

Cook Islands Standard Classification of Occupations (CISCO)

This coding manual is intended to be used by the Statistics Office. Its main purpose is to provide a system for classifying and aggregating occupational information. The CISCO adopted the same general principles and definitions as that of the International Standard Classification of Occupation (ISCO) 1988.

The CISCO is a structured 4-digit classification, with the first digit denoting the Major Division, the next digit denoting the group and the last two digits the class.

These codes are to be used in all statistical classification of occupations.
